

Middle school students learn more on why not to bully

Milo Dailey, Butte County Post staff

Ben D. Anderson offered Belle Fourche Middle School students three presentations for different classes last week. Anderson, now living in Rapid City, was born with cerebral palsy. He has taken his college degree in vocational rehabilitation into a nonprofit organization, Break Through, Inc., designed to build awareness and sensitivity toward people with disabilities. The program was free for the school district to help students learn how to help fellow students with or without disabilities to help everyone achieve more in life.
